The First Spring Flower. Different writers have named different wild flowers as first to appear in the Northern states. John Burroughs says that the hepatica is the earliest, and Bryant, in one of his poems has immortalized the yellow violet, Viola rotundifolia, as first, while other writers have given the honor to the beautiful little trailing arbutus--New England's own Mayflower. All of course exclude the skunk-cabbage, and such blossoms as the pussy-willows and the hazel and silver-maple blooms, which are not in the general acceptance of the term, true wild...
