The alleys were advertised, and awarded in groups of from thirty to forty to a single contract. The cost of each alley is assessed against the abutting property. Alleys are guaranteed by the contractors for a period of five years. Up to the present time maintenance has been very small. On most alleys there has been none at all. The success of concrete alleys in Baltimore may best be shown by the fact that there are at present over 600,000 square yards of them in the city and that the officials in charge of paving are planning to increase this yardage as rapidly as possible. ROADS QUESTION By M. S. Darrow, 99 For years, discussion has been rife regarding the question of what constitutes a good road. The layman has been harangued on all sides with advertisements, circulars, literature of all descriptions, praising to the skies one material or another as the sure panacea for road ills. Although the writer does not intend to discourage limited experiments with various materials to test their adaptability for road purposes, still it has always been to him a source of wonder that there should be a shadow of a doubt in any mind as to the type of material, or materials, that are best adapted to good roads construction. Within the larger cities throughout the country lies the answer to the road question. They have no paving problem, no lengthy discussions are brought out at each new contract...
