It will be seen from the instructions of Lord Wolseley to Sir H. Stewart and to Sir C. W. Wilson that the Desert Column was not primarily sent for the relief of Khartum, and that so far, as we have already pointed out, neither his Lordship nor the Chief of his Staff appeared to recognise any immediate or pressing necessity for an armed intervention for that purpose. In further proof of the statements already made on this state of confidence at the Head Quarters of the Expedition, we refer to Lord Wolseley's despatch of January 29th, enclosing one from Sir C. W. Wilson, describing the operations of the Desert Column after the 18th, when, after Sir H. Stewart had been wounded, he had taken command of it: --The result, Lord Wolseley informed Lord Hartington, of these successfully-executed operations has been to place us in possession of the desert route from this place (Korti) to the Nile, in the vicinity of Mutemma, near which place we are now fairly established, cutting off in great measure the enemy's forces north of Shendy from those besieging Khartum, thus rendering still more difficult than before the feeding of the Mahdi's army, already short of provisions. Further on in this military romancing spirit--for common sense will not permit any other description of the views Lord Wolseley expresses in it--he further congratulates himself by these successes of being able to capture Berber, as...
